10:30 Coffee break

11:00 Peer-to-peer Open Space “Networked Diplomacy”

Format “Each one teach one”: Each GDL participant brings unique diplomatic insights and perspectives to Istanbul. We would like to encourage the members to share them with the other participants by hosting a "teaching a diplomatic skill" session. The focus of this session will be on practical and creative skills rather than projects.

Every participant can propose to host a 1-hour interactive session or discussion round. Participants choose the sessions they are most interested in.

Idea: In a more complex world, diplomacy occurs both inside and outside of formal diplomatic circles. How to recognize weaknesses and strengths of different actors and to build synergies among them, allowing regulation without falling into the fallacy of control, is key for effective policy making.

Explore existing innovative examples of international cooperation from different topic areas (trade, humanitarian, environmental, security issues) and across different groups (national, local governments, business associations, foundations, and grass roots groups) and identify the instruments, processes and skills that make their cooperation a success.

In short: What can traditional diplomats and other international actors learn from each other? How can they cooperate towards mutually desirable outcomes?

13:00 Lunch

14:00 Open Situation Room

The role of Turkey in the new multi-polar world – Is the ‘zero problems with neighbors’ policy is a model for the future?

Speaker:

Fuat Keyman, Director of Istanbul Policy Center and Professor of International Relations at Sabancı University

Facilitator:

Emre Tunçalp, Managing Partner, Sidar Global Advisors

Global Diplomacy Lab

A situation room is a place where government officials gather in times of crisis to collect information and coordinate activities. Inspired by this example, it is a location designed for debate and discussion, rather than for command and control. It is an atelier politique, an information centre and a meeting place for decision makers, artists, students, analysts and journalists.
