A situation room is a place where government officials gather in times of crisis to collect information and coordinate activities. Inspired by this example, an open situation room is a location designed for debate and discussion, rather than for command and control. It is an atelier politique, an information centre and a meeting place for decision makers, artists, students, analysts and journalists.

Peer-to-peer Open Space PART 1: “Networked Diplomacy”

Each GDL participant brings unique diplomatic insights and perspectives to Berlin. We would like to encourage the members to share them with the other participants by hosting a "teaching a diplomatic skill" session. The focus of this session will be on practical and creative skills rather than projects.

Participants can propose to host a 45min interactive session or discussion round. The other participants choose the sessions they are most interested in.

Idea: In a more complex world, diplomacy occurs both inside and outside of formal diplomatic circles. How to recognize weaknesses and strengths of different actors and to build synergies among them, allowing regulation without falling into the fallacy of control, is key for effective policy making.

Explore existing innovative examples of international cooperation from different topic areas (trade, humanitarian, environmental, security issues) and across different groups (national, local governments, business associations, foundations, and grass roots groups) and identify the instruments, processes and skills that make their cooperation a success.

In short: What can traditional diplomats and other international actors learn from each other? How can they cooperate towards mutually desirable outcomes?

18:00

Peer-to-peer Open Space PART 2: “Idea Gallery”

Participants will present a project they currently work on or an idea they developed during the Open Space session.
